Fun Bible Facts

What kind of fish were in the Sea of Galilee?

Today thirty-five species of fish make their home in the waters of the Sea of Galilee and the Jordan River, but three types seem to be most common in the New Testament record. The sardines were a staple of the locals' diet and these were probably the "two small fish" which Jesus used to feed the multitude.

The musht fish has a long dorsal fin which resembles a comb and is today popularly known as "St. Peter's fish." This tasty fish could measure up to a foot and a half long (0.5 m.) and weigh 3.3 lbs (1.5 kg.).

The third type is the catfish, which is not considered kosher because of its lack of scales. These probably would have been brought to mind when Jesus referred to the bad fish that would be thrown away (Mt. 13:48).
