- * The right to sue in the courts and the right to be sued.
- * The right to have a legal trial (to appear before a proper court and to defend oneself).
- * The right to appeal the decisions of magistrates and to appeal the lower court decisions.
- * A Roman citizen could not be tortured or whipped, nor could he receive the death penalty, unless he was found guilty of treason.
- * If accused of treason, a Roman citizen had the right to be tried in Rome, and even if sentenced to death, no Roman citizen could be sentenced to die on the cross.
